Dear Mr. Attorney General:

When President John F. Kennedy was assassinated the President had a commission investigate the events and persons surrounding that infamous day on the History of Mankind. The testimony and data accumulated are Federal Property and I'm certain well protected. Thus, should anyone disagree with the commission's findings it is all there to be examined and remains for posterity.

I would like to recommend that the President create two more commissions to examine the two assassinations that have taken place since then. The assassination of Senator Robert F. Kennedy and the assassination of Reverend Martin Luther King.

As in the case of the first commission, the purpose of these commissions should be to examine the events and these terrible actions confide the data and testimony and write reports of their findings. This is especially important to do soon since the two assassins have been convicted for the crimes and are there to be questioned should discrepancies arise. These would not be retrials but rather studies and analyses in depth into the complex situations surrounding the events. The members, as before, should be of all different backgrounds and political tenets so that there is complete objectivity.

We owe it to ourselves, our Country, the World, posterity, and to the Constitution which the late President, Senator, and Reverend always defended to have these Presidential Commissions created and their studies commenced immediately.

Very respectfully yours,

Paul Sharpshak Ph.D.
